EVERYONE LIKES A GOOD PREQUEL

It's 2007 – maybe 2008 – and Kevin Brittingham is on a roll.

This was the golden era of Advanced Armament Corp (AAC): innovative designs, great silencers, and huge government contracts were the norm. Kevin and his team teased a product that would change the silencer industry forever: the famed AAC Black Box.

But they never shipped a single unit.

Meanwhile, in Utah, Jonathon Shults was mixing albums for some of the music industry's biggest names. He loved shooting and had recently gotten into silencers when the Black Box was unveiled. It caught his eye, and he wanted it badly. He teamed up with a couple guys and started SilencerCo, launching the best-selling .22 LR can ever made: the Sparrow 22.

With AAC not shipping—and not having plans to ship, Jonathon decided he was going to make his own Black Box.

Jonathon is a self-taught man. He's smart like that.

SilencerCo was a tiny operation back then, and he wore a lot of hats. Despite having a background as a sound engineer and musician, he taught himself to be a mechanical engineer and machinist. After dipping his toe into monocore rimfire silencers, he was ready to create the monocore centerfire pistol can of his dreams. After hundreds of iterations and solving the pesky indexing problem, the Osprey was born. Fifteen years later it's still selling, with total units sold in the six figures.

Fast forward to 2024. SilencerCo is selling more silencers than ever. Over the past 16 years the engineering and manufacturing abilities have only improved.

One day, somewhere between debating new calibers and firearm platforms, a new tangent was followed:

What if we make the absolute best pistol silencer ever made?

A discussion formed around the industry's current top silencers. Lots of debate followed until Jonathon said, "Let's do the Black Box." Patents were checked and design aesthetics were established immediately.

R&D got to work. With a fleet of cutting edge machinery the task of welding a very complicated shape became possible. Chips were cut, and the first prototype was made.

Anxiously, the R&D, Marketing, and Executive teams crowded into the testing facility to hear the very first rounds through project "Black Box."

It was glorious. Laughter, smiles, and a sense of something great filled the range.

Many versions followed as the team worked to make it lighter, quieter, and shorter. What you have today in 2025 is a product that would have been the original Osprey, had all the experience, wisdom, and machine capability existed back then. A prequel of sorts. But it's not an Osprey or a Black Box.

It's the S98: the most advanced pistol silencer ever made. It's unbelievably quiet, looks amazing, and stands as a testament to the abilities of the SilencerCo team.
